Marfan Syndrome is a severe life-threatening disorder. Whilst not widely recognised, it blights the lives of over 18,000 people in the UK, with many more unknown and is passed directly from parent to child, with a 50-50 chance that each child may be affected. Involvement can produce blindness, spinal curvature requiring surgery, lung disease and sudden cardiac death due to aortic dissection. Subjects are often extremely tall from an early age, need to wear thick glasses and are clumsy at sports due to lax ligaments, all these features resulting in teasing and bullying and a poor self-image which often leads to long term psychological disability.

The Marfan Trust was founded in 1988 to support medical research into the cause and possible prevention of Marfan Syndrome. Please give as much as you can and help the Marfan Trust find preventive treatment for Marfan Syndrome. Thank you for your generous support.
